

Nearly ten months after Hurricane Harvey caused devastation along the Texas Gulf Coast, one man in Sugar Land continues to do his part to help those in need as they try to piece their lives back together.

Lloyd Milat, a retired Standards Manager, works with his son, Joshua, in their custom furniture design business in Spring, TX. Lloyd wanted to use his woodworking skills in his own workshop to help those folks affected by Hurricane Harvey who had little or no insurance. So, the charitable venture “H. harvey series” was launched. Lloyd chose to make table sets because he knows whether it is to share a meal, play a game, or have a discussion, gathering around the table brings family and friends together. After working with several local relief organizations to provide this furniture at no cost, Lloyd was contacted by Amy Montgomery from Port Aransas Relief. She indicated a great need in her area. Together they made a plan. Lloyd notifies Ms. Montgomery as the sets are finished, she identifies the families who are ready to move back into permanent housing and deliveries are arranged. Lloyd and his wife have delivered seven table sets to the Port Aransas/Rockport area to date. Lloyd plans to continue producing these free sets as long as the need exists and he is able. “We were blessed to sustain no damage from this storm, so I feel a need to help those did.” says Lloyd.
